Mr. Anindya Paulchaudhuri

Ms. Deepa Malik discusses elusive Olympic and Paralympic Golds and ways to win them in conversation with Mr. Anindya Paulchaudhuri at the KLM 2025. It was featured in The Telegraph.

t2 on Sunday

The Telegraph 26 JANUARY 2025 14

FROM P13

The morning of Day 3 had a start with DEEPA MALIK and her story of courage and resilience. The avant-garde sportswoman, who has won multiple international medals, has been the first Indian woman to win a Paralympic medal in shot put and has been a strong voice when it comes to advocating for the rights of specially-abled people. was in conversation with Anindya Paulchaudhuri in the session Med Medal Mantra.

Talking about the significance of a medal irrespective of the colour and metal, the Padma Shri and Arjuna Award winner said "I feel a medal is a medal. I do understand the sense of pride in getting gold and you get the top of the medal tally. However, nothing to take away from those who win medals. My heart also goes out to those who get fourth in the medal tally. If you notice the winner or the difference between a third and the second position or any other position is a fraction of a second."

Malik highlighted how the tally of medals has improved significantly over the years, including the number of women winning big, but she also pointed out how we need to believe more in ourselves.

The conversation veered towards sports bodies being helmed by politicians and Malik listed the positive aspects of it. "I think we need them because they are the representatives of the people and they can reach out to people more than we can do. They also have the power to make sound decisions and make policies that are favourable for the sports community. Also, the government does a lot in their capacity. We also need to take onus and do our bit in making the society and the sports community more inclusive," said Malik, who is the South Asian sub-region representative of the Asian Paralympic Committee, a member of Disability Advisory Committee of the Government of Uttar Pradesh and former president of the Paralympic Committee of India.

In the later part of the session, the role of private sponsorship was discussed that brought to the fore the amount of money that is required to support an athlete with-disability.
